

A UWL student didn't even make it to his first day of school before running afoul of police this semester. Cops say 25 year-old Anthony Belvedere has a felony charge for substantial battery hanging over his head after sucker punching a guy on a street corner early Monday morning. Police say the victim was just talking to a girl he met in a bar. Apparently, it was the way he was talking to her that brought out the wrath of about a half a dozen guys nearby. The victim and his brother were attacked. But it was Belvedere who cops say did the most damage; knocked the guy's tooth out. He was arrested Monday night. No word on whether Belvedere made it to the first day of classes Tuesday.
