

Big Snowfall To Miss La Crosse...For Now

Don't be too worried about the forecast of the 'monster' snow and ice storm sweeping through the middle of the U-S this week.

Meteorologist Todd Shea at the National Weather Service office in La Crosse says the storm is still more likely to affect southeastern Wisconsin than this area.

Shea predicts the storm system could bring La Crosse a little more light snow, on top of the three inches recorded on Monday. The city had 11 inches of snow for January...an inch-and-a-half below normal for the month.
